MAIN AREAS OF RESEARCH

- PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION AND QUESTION OF GOD
- PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY AND ESCHATOLOGY
- HEGEL AND GERMAN IDEALISM IN THE CONTEXT OF POSTMODERN PHILOSOPHY
- NEW HUMANISM
- PHILOSOPHY OF THE BIBLE

Appel's approach to philosophy and theology is driven by the conviction that research must overcome disciplinary boundaries and has to create a new interdisciplinary space to investigate the original socio-political tasks of philosophy and theology. In present times classical schemata, such as clearly delineated religious worlds and their corresponding theological terminologies were transformed or became blurred. Against this background Appel initiated and conducted vast research on the transformation of boundaries of religions and the crisis of representation. Appel's main research areas are philosophy of religion, eschatology, philosophy of history, Hegel and German Idealism and New Humanism. His thought aims at a disclosure of the meaning of history in a contemporary societal and scientific context. He conceptualizes philosophy of religion as a criticism of knowledge and religions. Appel engages in the question of a new humanism contesting positivistic tendencies. One of his main achievements is the reconstruction of Hegelian philosophy under the consideration of postmodern (Derrida, Deleuze, Agamben) and phenomenological (Heidegger, Merleau-Ponty) critiques and readings. Appel tries to put forth an innovative reading of Hegel that is sensitive to alterity and finitude. Against this backdrop Appel discloses the relevance of Hegelian categories for contemporary discourses on philosophy of religion, society and new political theology. He has extensively engaged in developing a fundamental theological theory of time and history. Among the most important results of his work is the illumination of the philosophical and theological meaning of mortality and finitude (cf. his book "Preis der Sterblichkeit").
